Canaccord Genuity Growth Fund – Manager's commentary

The Canaccord Genuity Growth Fund rose 2.04% during September, underperforming its peer group, the Morningstar EAA Fund USD Aggressive Allocation sector, which rose 2.49%.

Historically, September has a reputation as the weakest month for global equity markets, often characterised by heightened volatility and investor caution, as many traders return to their desks following the summer break. September 2025 bucked this trend, with the Bloomberg World Large & Mid Cap Total Return Index rising 3.61% in total return terms, extending its gain for the year to date to 18.7%.

These gains were driven by renewed enthusiasm for artificial intelligence (AI)-related investments, supportive monetary policy shifts, and resilient corporate earnings.

Undoubtedly, the standout theme of the month was the dramatic resurgence of the "AI trade." On 10 September, Oracle shares surged an extraordinary 36% after the company announced four large-scale, multi-billion-dollar contracts linked to the expansion of cloud infrastructure and AI computing capabilities. The move reflected an industry-wide acceleration in capital expenditure by firms such as OpenAI and xAI, which are racing to secure the computational power needed to maintain leadership in the rapidly evolving AI landscape. Oracle's rally represented one of the seven largest single-day market capitalisation increases in S&P 500 history, adding more than US$250 billion in value.

Momentum within the semiconductor and hardware space continued a week later when Intel's shares jumped 23% following news that Nvidia—currently the world's most valuable publicly traded company—would invest US$5 billion in Intel as part of a new partnership to co-develop customised AI chips. Nvidia's own stock rose 3.6% on the day, extending its dominance in the sector and reinforcing investor confidence in the broader AI supply chain. These developments catalysed strong monthly gains for any index heavily weighted toward technology names. In the United States, the tech-focused Nasdaq Composite advanced 5.6% in September, while Asian markets with significant semiconductor exposure also outperformed - South Korea's KOSPI rose 6.4% in US dollar terms, supported by Samsung Electronics and SK Hynix, and Taiwan's TAIEX climbed 6.9% on continued strength from Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Company (TSMC).

Monetary policy developments added further support. On 18 September, the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) delivered a widely anticipated 25 basis point rate cut, bringing the effective federal (Fed) funds rate to just above 4%. Chair Jerome Powell reiterated the Fed's data-dependent approach, acknowledging growing risks to employment and moderating inflation expectations. Futures markets are now pricing in a further 50 basis points of easing before year-end, bolstering sentiment across interest rate-sensitive sectors.

In Europe, attention turned to sovereign credit risk as Fitch downgraded France's long-term debt rating from AA- to A+. Although the move reflected ongoing fiscal slippage and weak political consensus around deficit reduction, the appointment of Sébastien Lecornu as Prime Minister helped calm markets, with French bond spreads narrowing modestly by month-end. Broader European equities held steady, benefiting from the global risk-on tone and a softer euro.

Commodities also drew investor interest amid rising demand for tangible and non-fiat assets. Gold reached an all-time high of US$3,858 per ounce, extending its year-to-date gain to 47%. Silver and platinum similarly advanced, supported by persistent central bank buying, geopolitical tensions, and hedging demand from investors wary of currency debasement.

The only change of note came as we elected to dispose of the holding of Findlay Park American, following a period of continued underperformance, and reinvested the proceeds into the Loomis Sayles US Growth Equity Fund.

Loomis regard equity investments as if they are buying or partnering with private businesses: thinking like an owner of a business over a long time horizon. This mindset helps guide decisions about what constitutes a sustainable competitive advantage and what management teams can deliver over multiple years. Investment decisions are based around three core criteria: quality, growth and valuation. Quality businesses are those with durable competitive advantages, strong financials and good returns on invested capital. Growth companies offer secular, profitable growth drivers and are expected to generate strong long-term growth in cash flow. Finally, the fund manager aims to buy companies which trade at a meaningful discount to their estimate of intrinsic value. They won't compromise valuation, even for good growth or high quality.
