Egis in Canada Announces New Executive Appointments

Egis, a global leader in architecture, consulting, construction engineering, operations and mobility services, has announced two new executive appointments. Jon Heisler joins the firm as the Executive Vice President of Energy and Sustainable Cities in Canada. Chris Redmond joins Egis in the role of Executive Vice President for Transportation in Canada.

Greg Northcott, CEO of Egis in Canada, noted, "These appointments strengthen our leadership team and support our ambitious strategic plan. I'm confident that Jon and Chris will play pivotal roles in our continued success."

Jon Heisler

Jon brings extensive industry experience to Egis, having led large engineering and design teams across Canada. His leadership has driven substantial increases in both team size and revenue through a blend of profitable organic and acquisitive growth.

Chris Redmond

With over 35 years of engineering and business experience, Chris has led large, multi-disciplined teams to deliver complex projects on-time and within budget. His strategic leadership has significantly increased operational performance in his previous roles.

Egis is Engineering News Record (ENR)-ranked #7 worldwide in Transportation and #9 worldwide in Buildings. The global firm is rapidly expanding their presence in the Canadian market; the executive appointments follow the firm's recently announced acquisition of Ecometrix, a leading environmental and water consultancy.
